We should all be Policeman

Policeman, a man that can be praised in one place, booed in another and feared in other places, but none-the-less, there's one thing that most if not all will agree on, they're here to uphold the law.

We as Christians share this same type of responsibility when it comes to reaching the lost, and like the cop, most will not like us, others might praise us and very few will appreciate us, but we must preach the law before we show them Calvary. It's very troubling to think that those who have been diagnosed with Cancer, leukemia or any other terrible and terminal illness will always want to know the truth of their condition, but those who are born in sin and on their way to Hell will always scoff and mock when told of their condition. Though hard to do, and Doctor's know first hand how this feels, we must give them (sinners) the bad news, or else a sinless perfect Savior would not make much sense.

An interesting and disturbing stat taken from a major denomination in 1991 stated that there were 294,000 decisions for Christ made that year, but only 14,000 were members of that church the following year. At Morning Star, we are blessed to be part of a church that believes everyone is born into sin and without repentance; there cannot be a true salvation. I pray that whether you witness on your own or you're door knocking with us on Wednesday or Thursday nights, you never forget to teach the law and show them their sin before you show them the Savior. This year when you do witness, whenever or wherever you are, think about Jesus and his delivery to the woman at the well. Notice that Jesus did not reveal himself to her until he had shown the woman of her adulterous sin she was living in.
